GEORGE WASHINGTON, RONALD REAGAN CONDUCT HULL SWAP

NAS NORTH ISLAND -Aircraft carriers USS George Washington (CVN 73) and USS Ronald Reagan (CVN 76) conducted a hull swap here that sends Ronald Reagan to Bremerton, Wash., and returns George Washington to Yokosuka, Japan, as the Navy's only forwarddeployed Naval Forces-Japan aircraft carrier effective Aug. 1.

The hull swap was planned in coordination with the government of Japan, and as a part of the 50-year lifespan of the U.S. Navy's Nimitz-class aircraft carriers.

"USS Ronald Reagan has served exceptionally as America's forward deployed aircraft carrier for nearly a decade, projecting credible combat power while sailing and flying where international law allows and doing so with allies and partners throughout the Indo-Pacific," said Rear Adm. Greg Newkirk, commander of Task Force 70 and Carrier Strike Group 5. "Reagan's crew and those who have served aboard over the past several years should be tremendously proud of what they accomplished."

George Washington relieving Ronald Reagan marks the second time the ship will serve as the FDNF-J aircraft carrier. In 2008, George Washington became the first nuclear powered aircraft carrier to serve as FDNF-J and was relieved by Ronald Reagan seven years later after a historic tri-carrier hull swap.

"For the last nine years, Ronald Reagan Sailors upheld the international rule of law and maintained a free and open Indo-Pacific alongside our allies and partners through their diligence and dedication towards our common goals," said Capt. Daryle Cardone, Ronald Reagan's skipper. "Their commitment has left a mark on the 7th Fleet area of responsibility and the impact we made will be continued as George Washington makes its way to Yokosuka. I know 7th Fleet is in good hands and as Ronald Reagan left behind a legacy of 'peace through strength, George Washington will embody the 'spirit of freedom' in the Indo-Pacific once again.'

Austin orders review of Wounded Knee medals

619.280.2985

By Joseph Clark, DOD News

Secretary of Defense Lloyd J. Austin III has directed the Defense Department to review the Medals of Honor awarded to approximately 20 soldiers for their actions during the December 1890 engagement at Wounded Knee Creek, South Dakota, to ensure no awardees were recognized for conduct inconsistent with the nation's highest military honor.

DOD's Office of the Undersecretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness will convene a special review panel to conduct an individualized assessment based on standards in effect during that period.

The scope of the panel's review is limited to examining each Medal of Honor awardee's individual actions during the engagement at Wounded Knee Creek. However, "The [special review panel] may consider the context of the overall engagement as appropriate, including as necessary to understand each [Wounded Knee Creek Medal of Honor] recipient's individual actions," Austin wrote in a memorandum directing the review, which was released today.

Austin recentlyigned the memorandum following department consultation with the White House and Department of the Interior.

"It's never too late to do what's right," a senior defense official said in an interview last week. "And that's what is intended by the review that the secretary directed, which is to ensure that we go back and review each of these medals in a rigorous and individualized manner to understand the actions of the individual in the context of the overall engagement."

The official noted that the review is warranted based on a range of factors, including a congressional recommendation to review the awards included in the fiscal year 2022 National Defense Authorization Act.

The panel will provide Austin with a recommendation to either retain or rescind each Medal of Honor awarded for actions related to the Wounded Knee engagement, which resulted in the death and injury of approximately 350 to 375 Native American men, women and children, according to a 1990 Senate resolution.

In memoriam: Gen. Crist, first Marine Combatant Commander

BEAUFORT, S.C. - The Marine Corps remembers the legacy of General George Brainard Crist who passed away July 26 in Beaufort, S.C.

Crist was born in Hartford, Conn., on Jan. 23, 1931. He attended Villanova University and was commissioned as a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps in 1952, retiring in 1988.

During his 36 years of service, GCrist served in all three active-duty Marine divisions, 1st, 2nd and 3rd, and several major conflicts to include the Korean War, the Cuban missile crisis, and the Vietnam War. He held key positions at every level including White House Aide, assistant chief of staff, and battalion commander.

"His two legacies really were becoming the first Marine to command a unified command and Operation Earnest Will. " David B. Crist, son of Gen. Crist Crist was a wealth of experience and knowledge, particularly regarding joint operations, which led him to become the commander of U.S. Central Command – the first Marine general officer ever to be appointed as a combatant commander.

Operation Earnest Will was the first protracted military operation in the Middle East that culminated in the Navy's largest surface engagement since World War II.

Navy is on track to rearm warships at sea in 2-3 years

by Caitlyn Burchett Stars and Stripes

WASHINGTON - The Navy is one step closer to rearming ships at sea, a capability that would keep warships in the fight rather than forcing them to return to port during combat.

The first successful land-based demonstration of the Transferrable Rearming Mechanism, or TRAM, was announced July 24 by the Naval Surface Warfare Center in Port Hueneme, Calif. The system will enable Navy destroyers and cruisers to reload missiles into vertical launching systems while at sea - a task that now must be done pier side.

"No longer will our combatants need to withdraw from combat for extended periods to return for vulnerable in-port reloading of weapon systems.

My intention is to perfect

... My intention is to perfect this capability and field it for sustained, persistent forward-strike capacity during wartime," Navy Secretary Carlos Del Toro said during a speech at Columbia University in December 2022, one of his earliest mentions of the new technology.

The rearming mechanism uses a crane that can lift and rotate 25-foot missile canisters vertically, then lowers the explosives into the launchers, which are small openings in the ship deck. The system is designed to be used with existing at-sea replenishment ships and will be able to reload vertical launch systems on surface ships in sea states 3 or higher. A sea state 3 means winds of 7-10 knots and 2-foot waves, according to the Beaufort Scale, a measure that estimates wind speed and its effects based on observed sea or land conditions.

Operationally, reloading in the open ocean would allow the U.S. surface fleet to engage enemy ships with a "relentless tempo and volume of long-range salvos," Navy officials said July 25. It means adversaries won't be able to home in on U.S. ships at friendly ports, widening the area that an adversary must search to target them.

"This prospect will disrupt the strategic calculus of those who would do us harm - a near-term deterrent that should give any would-be aggressor pause," a Navy spokesperson said.

The technology will be tested at sea before the end of 2024 and is on track to be fielded in two to three years - an unprecedented delivery speed, according to Naval Sea Systems Command. In fiscal 2023, the service allocated $3.9 million in research, test, development and evaluation funds with another $12.4 million dedicated to the program in fiscal 2024.

At-sea rearming has been intermittently tested by the U.S. over the years but became a top priority for Del Toro in 2022, as the threat of conflict with Chin looms.

"When the Navy is facing China and the possibility of firing a lot of missiles very quickly, particularly given the Chinese missile threat, reloading is very important because the Navy doesn't want to spend a lot of time sailing back to wherever to reload," said Mark Cancian, a senior adviser for the Center for Strategic and International Studies, a Washington think tank.

A report released in January 2023 by the CSIS estimated in a conflict over Taiwan, the U.S. could run out of several categories of vital munitions - such as long-range, anti-ship missiles - in less than a week. A 2019 study by the Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments, another Washington think tank, estimated in a conflict with China, the Navy could expend more than 360 missiles a day, or 10,800 per month. U.S. warships would have to make multiple trips to rearm.

For the Pacific fleet, these reload sites are in Japan, Guam, Hawaii and California and would mean leaving the battle for weeks at a time. "And if those ports were out of action, they would be in trouble," Cancian said.

Efforts to strike back at Houthi rebels in Yemen launching missiles at shipping lanes in the Red Sea underscores the need for at-sea rearming, he said.

USS Dwight D. Eisenhower's aircraft carrier strike group's cruiser and destroyers launched more than 180 missiles in self-defense or pre-planned strikes during its seven months operating in the Middle East.

The combat pace in the Red Sea is slow enough that the U.S. can pull one destroyer out to reload at a friendly port and substitute it with another in combat. That would not be an option if conflict broke out in the Pacific, Cancian said.

"Being able to reload forward would make things easier in the Red Sea — it would be helpful," he said. "But it is critical for a fight with China."

Navy SEAL COVID-19 vaccine suit settlement vindicates religious objectors

by Alison Bath Stars and Stripes

Navy Sailors who faced disciplinary actions related to their refusal to comply with the CO-VID-19 vaccine mandate on account of religion can correct their service records and protect their careers as part of a recently settled lawsuit.

The settlement, which was approved by a Texas federal judge last week, involves a lawsuit filed in 2021 on behalf of 26 Navy SEALs and several other Special Warfare Sailors.

The suit alleged that the service and the Defense Department had violated the First Amendment rights of service members who had religious objections to the vaccine mandate. It also claimed that the Navy and DOD violated the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, which prohibits federal agencies, departments or officials from violating the free exercise of religion.

The SEALs' lawsuit subsequently was expanded to include a class of all Navy service members who had religious objections to the vaccine, First Liberty Institute, the law firm representing the Sailors, said in a statement July 24 announcing approval of the settlement the same day.

Under the settlement, the Navy must recheck personnel records of service members covered by the lawsuit to ensure that all documented adverse actions taken solely due to vaccine mandate refusal are permanently deleted, according to federal court records.

Those adverse actions include administrative separation proceedings and processes, formal counseling and nonjudicial punishment.

"This has been a long and difficult journey, but the Navy SEALs never gave up," Danielle Runyan, senior counsel for First Liberty Institute, said in the statement. "We are thrilled that those members of the Navy who were guided by their conscience and steadfast in their faith will not be penalized in their Navy careers."

On Tuesday, the Navy said it did not have a statement regarding the settlement.

But in rescinding his August 2021 order mandating vaccination against COVID-19, Defense

Sailors who refused the COVID-19 vaccine on religious grounds and had adverse actions taken by the Navy as a result can have their records corrected, according to the terms of a lawsuit settlement reached last week. U.S. Navy photo by Jackson Adkins

Secretary Lloyd Austin said he believed that the order was correct and that the services would continue to promote the vaccine.

"All commanders have the responsibility and authority to preserve the department's compelling interest in mission accomplishment," Austin said in January 2023.

The settlement also requires the Navy to correct the records of service members who left the service rather than face punishment for their religious objections to the vaccine.

The records of those covered by the lawsuit who were discharged solely because they refused the vaccine also must be reviewed, and any indication that the individual was removed for misconduct must be deleted.

In addition, the service must ensure that the records of those service members reflect that they are eligible for reenlistment, court records show.

Moreover, the Navy must pay $1.5 million in attorneys fees and make a public statement affirming its respect for religious service members.

The service also agreed to provide more training for commanders who review religious accommodation requests, among other stipulations, according to the First Liberty Institute statement.

It's unclear how many service members may be affected by the settlement, but the Navy stopped the COVID-19 vaccine-related separations of 4,095 sailors who objected to the vaccine on account of religion in March 2022, USNI news reported at the time.

That action came after a federal judge granted class-action certification in the SEALs' case and issued a preliminary injunction forbidding the Navy from separating or taking other disciplinary actions against sailors represented in the lawsuit, according to court records.

However, the Navy retained the ability to take vaccination status into account when making deployment, assignment and other operational decisions.

U.S. intends to reconstitute U.S. Forces Japan as joint forces headquarters

by C. Todd Lopez, DOD News

Through a phased approach, the U.S. plans to convert U.S. Forces Japan into a joint force headquarters which will report to the commander of the Indo-Pacific Command, the secretary of defense said July 28 following the conclusion of a two-plus-two ministerial meeting in Tokyo.

Included in the meeting were Secretary of Defense Lloyd J. Austin III, Secretary of State Antony Blinken, Japanese Defense Minister Minoru Kihara and Foreign Minister Yoko Kamikawa.

"We welcome an historic decision to modernize our alliance command and control to better meet the challenges of today and tomorrow," said Austin during a press briefing today that followed the high-level meetings. "The United States will upgrade the U.S. Forces Japan to a joint force headquarters with expanded missions and operational responsibilities.'

The new joint force headquarters will be under the command of a three-star officer and will serve as a counterpart to Japan's own Japan Self-Defense Forces Joint Operations Command, Austin said.

"This will be the most significant change to U.S. Forces Japan since its creation, and one of the strongest improvements in our military ties with Japan in 70 years," he said. "Japan's new Joint Operations Command will further allow our forces to work together more closely than ever. And these new operational capabilities and responsibilities will advance our collective deterrence."

Austin said the change is based on a desire to work more closely with Japan and enhance the effectiveness of the existing relationship.

Also part of the discussions. Austin said, were ways to increase bilateral presence in Japan's southwest islands: a reaffirmation of the importance of cooperation on cybersecurity, intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance; cross-domain operations and bilateral exercises and training; and ideas for new areas for defense industrial cooperation.

According to a joint statement by the Security Consultative Committee, meeting participants discussed co-production opportunities to expand production capacity of both advanced medium-range air-to-air missiles and Patriot Advanced Capability-3 Missile Segment Enhancement missiles.

"Finally, we held a separate two-plus-two ministerial level meeting on extended deterrence. and that has never been done before," Austin said. "During that meeting, I reaffirmed our ironclad commitment to defend Japan with the full range of our capabilities, including our nuclear capabilities."

As part of the extended deterrence meeting, participants discussed, among other topics, North Korea's destabilizing activities in the region, including its unlawful nuclear and ballistic missile programs; China's expansion of its nuclear arsenal; and Russia's unlawful arms transfers with North Korea

Austin said he considered each meeting in Tokyo to be a success.

"We're reinforcing our combined ability to deter and respond to coercive behavior in the Indo-Pacific and beyond, he said. "We're reinforcing the rules-based international order that keeps us safe. The agreements that we've advanced today will ensure that the U.S.-Japan alliance remains a cornerstone of security and stability in the Indo-Pacific.

Top science, technology official highlights importance of DOD outreach to minority academic STEM programs

by Matthew Olay DOD News

Assistant Secretary of Defense for Science and Technology Aprille Ericsson spoke about the importance of the Defense Department reaching out to minority academic science, technology, engineering and mathematics, or STEM, programs and their students during keynote remarks at a DOD-sponsored event July 25 just outside of Washington.

Ericsson's speech kicked-off the Historically Black Colleges and Universities and Minority-Serving Institutions, or HBCU/MI, Opportunities Workshop and Intern Seminar — a two-day event with a stated goal of raising awareness of DOD opportunities, facilitating collaboration, promoting greater engagement in DOD initiatives that support national security functions and encouraging students to explore DOD HBCU/MI STEM opportunities.

"[HBCU/MI] outreach is incredibly important for the [Defense Department], and we continue to seek out the best and brightest minds across the nation," Ericsson told the crowd.

"Diversity of backgrounds is important for long-term success [of science and technology] programs impacting our military service members."

Ericsson then listed several ways DOD is working to connect with such best and brightest minds.

"Opening doors for the future and current students attending HBCU or MI programs is an area I'm proud to say we're making great strides with scholarship opportunities," she said. Examples of such opportunities Ericsson mentioned included a new grant program offered by DOD's Science, Mathematics, and Research for Transformation Office; a scholarship for high school seniors (of which 12 awardees for 2024 will be attending an HBCU or MI in the fall); and a military scholarship pilot program for HBCUs and the Naval Postgraduate School.

Ericsson also spoke about the 15 HBCU Centers of Excellence that DOD has established over the years.

"These centers conduct collaborative research that helps to attract early career researchers and new opportunities for students to participate," said Ericsson.

"Our greatest asset at DOD is the people," she continued, "and we need more dedicated professionals like you all to continue and hopefully realign and reshape our programs for the future mission."

Having recently been confirmed by the Senate as the inaugural assistant secretary of defense for science and technology in early March, Ericsson — who holds a doctorate in mechanical engineering — oversees a comprehensive science and technology workforce of over 60,000 employees within DOD alone, in addition to 63 research laboratories and engineering centers across 200 locations worldwide.

"Our warfighters depend on talent and expertise within our science and technology workforce to maintain a competitive advantage, and I consider recruitment and retention one of my top priorities," Ericsson told attendees

"The skill sets within all the students here today are all vital for the [Defense Department], [and] we hope you consider government service."

Child care fee assistance available to DoD civilian employees

by Mark Wyatt, 66th Air Base Group Public Affairs

HANSCOM AIR FORCE BASE, Mass. - The Military Child Care in Your Neighborhood fee assistance program, available to activeduty and certain reserve members of the Department of Defense, is now being extended to federal civilian families. The program aims to make affordable, high-quality childcare accessible to more families, addressing a critical need within the services. "The program includes civilian employees who either do not live near an installation with child and youth programs or are stationed at installations pre-identified as eligible for fee assistance," said Rachel Washington-Freeman, Hanscom Air Force Base Child Development Center director. The MCCYN program supports families by ensuring they pay no more for off-base childcare than they would for on-installation care. "Fee assistance goal is to have family's pay the equivalent to or as close as possible to the cost of care on military installations," Washington-Freeman said. This initiative significantly reduces the financial burden on families. "This is critical support for our civilian personnel who have long faced challenges in accessing affordable childcare," Washington-Freeman said. "By extending this program to civilians, we're making it easier for them to balance their professional and family responsibilities." DoD civilians interested in the program can visit https://public.militarychildcare.csd.disa.mil/mcc-central/mcchome/mccyn/air-force to determine eligibility.

Navy Wounded Warrior (NWW) is the Navy's sole organization for coordinating the non-medical care of seriously wounded, ill, and injured Sailors and Coast Guardsmen, and providing resources and support to their families and caregivers.

Through proactive leadership, the program provides individually tailored assistance designed to optimize the success of the wounded warrior's recovery, rehabilitation, and reintegration activities.

The mission is to help Sailors and Coast Guardsmen return to duty. When that's not possible, the program works collaboratively with federal agencies and state and local organizations to ease them back into their communities.

NAVY'S 70+ ACRE OLD TOWN CAMPUS REVITALIZATION MOVES FORWARD

Courtesy Story Navy Region Southwest

SAN DIEGO - The Navy's proposal to revitalize the 70.3-acre Naval Base Point Loma Old Town Campus to provide new facilities for Naval Information Warfare Systems Command (NAVWAR) continues to move forward.

The Navy is working closely with selected developer Manchester Financial Group/Edgemoor Infrastructure & Real Estate (Manchester/Edgemoor) to potentially revitalize the Navy's Old Town Campus in San Diego, California.

The Navy is currently in the environmental review process as required by the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) to assess potential environmental impacts of revitalizing the site.

The Navy released a Draft Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) in 2021 for public review and comment. In response to comments received, the Navy began a competitive solicitation process in November 2022 and in January 2024 identified Manchester/Edgemoor to work with the Navy to develop site-specific details before a final alternative is selected

Now in an exclusive negotiation period. Manchester/Edgemoor may pursue local approvals such as permitting, any necessary environmental documentation, secure financing, and negotiate a potential lease with the Navy.

'The Navy's enduring partnerships with the City of San Diego and surrounding communities are essential to this successful initiative moving forward," said Rear Admiral

NAVWAR currently operates out of 80-year-old World War II era aircraft manufacturing plants. The Navy proposes to replace these obsolete buildings with state-of-the-art facilities to meet NAVWAR's mission requirements. Revitalizing the property, which is centrally located and ideal for transitoriented development, could provide much-needed housing

Brad Rosen, Commander of Navy Region Southwest. "While the Navy's goal is new missioncapable facilities for NAVWAR and other tenant commands, the Navy recognizes that any project that is good for the Navy should also provide positive impacts to the community."

In the Navy's largest leasing initiative, the Navy would potentially make available for lease. underutilized property at NB Point Loma in exchange for new mission-capable facilities for its primary tenant NAVWAR.

to help address San Diego's housing shortage and provide a possible new tax base for the City, County, and State.

NAVWAR is a significant economic contributor to San Diego, with an annual budget in excess of $11 billion, the command infuses $3.3 billion annually to the region. In fiscal year 2022, NAVWAR created 18,858 jobs in San Diego, generated $8.4 billion in contracts with private industry, and $1.74 billion in $contracts\ in\ San\ Diego.\ NAVWAR$ provides 50 percent of all cybersecurity jobs in San Diego.

Revitalization of the Navy's Old Town Campus could achieve mutually beneficial outcomes for the Navy and San Diego. In this potential leasing initiative, the developer would provide new NAVWAR facilities in exchange for private development of the remainder of the site to include housing, retail, commercial and potentially a transit center. The Navy must still complete an EIS and reach a Record of Decision before the project can begin.

"The Manchester/Edgemoor team is excited to start engaging with the local community as we move forward with the Navy through the environmental review process. This project represents a generational opportunity for the Navy and City of San Diego, and we intend to make sure the community is involved in each step along the way," said Neal Fleming, president of Edgemoor Infrastructure & Real Estate.

Since their selection earlier this year, the Manchester/Edgemoor team has initiated outreach and engagement with the City of San Diego, County of San Diego, state and local transportation agencies, and others, to better understand their priorities.

'We remain dedicated to continuing our collaboration with the Navy and the City of San

NMCSD observes World Hepatitis Day by raising awareness on screening, treatment

With World Hepatitis Day observed on 28 July, Naval Medical Center San Diego (NMCSD) needs your help managing and potentially curing forms of this treatable disease.

Although multiple different viruses can impact the liver, Hepatitis C is one of the most common types in the United States. Patients may not even know they are infected due to the lack of symptoms.

"Chronic hepatitis C has traditionally been a leading cause of chronic liver disease and liver transplants in the United States. Over the last decade, many new oral therapies have fundamentally changed the way we treat this disease – cure is now possible for most with just a few months of treatment," said Lt. Cmdr. Brett Sadowski, NMCSD gastroenterologist and Gastroenterology Fellowship program director. "We want to treat all our beneficiaries with this disease, including our younger population in order to prevent the development of complications. In the last few years, we have found that this younger group of patients has had one of the highest rates of infection."

To Sadowski, the liver is a fascinating and essential organ that so much of the human body depends on for healthy living.

"The liver performs many vital functions critical to living healthy lives, but it can be damaged by multiple causes, including viral hepatitis. With the advent of today's treatments, we can help prevent patients from the complications of chronic liver disease, including cirrhosis and liver cancer," said Sadowski.

Sadowski points out that all adults should be screened for chronic hepatitis C and B, even if they previously received vaccination for viral hepatitis. Prior vaccination generally provides protection against some forms of viral hepatitis, but not for hepatitis C.

"Most patients require a one-time screening test, but if a patient has certain risk factors for exposure, such as receiving tattoos with non-sterile instruments or certain sexual contact, then repeat screening may be required," said Sadowski.

The first line of defense is your primary care manager who should guide you through obtaining a simple blood test for screening.

On the convention's website. San Diego Comic-Con is described as "The Ultimate Event for Comics and the Popular Arts. Comic-Con is the premier event for all things comics and related popular art, including movies, television, gaming, interactive multimedia, and so much more! Enjoy cosplay galore and take part in unique programming, exclusive previews, and presentations, not to mention the expansive and diverse Exhibit Hall featuring merchandise and displays representing all fan-

Even all four-days (plus Preview Night) are not nearly enough to see and experience it all. The lines can be long, and lots of walking and standing are required. My visits typically include some panels, checking out the merchandise for sale (merch!) and booth exhibits, snagging a few giveaways (food and more merch!), cosplay, socializing, offsite activations and NETWORKING.

When I meet people who have never been to San Diego Comic-Con, they usually think that they would not enjoy it because they were not able to get a Comic-Con badge. That is not true. You do NOT need a badge to have an absolutely wonderful San Diego Comic-Con experience.

Yes, benefits of having a Comic-Con badge include getting access to where most of the multitude of panels are in the San Diego Convention Center and other official indoor venues, shopping for merch in the huge Convention Center Exhibit Hall, attending signings and being able to watch the Saturday evening Comic-Con Masquerade in-person. Panels that I attended each included one for "The Simpsons."

However, while those things and many others that require a badge to attend are great, there are other activities that are simply too large to fit in the Convention Center's limited space. These offsite activations, as they are called, are held in vacant buildings, parking lots and grassy areas by the movie, TV and streaming services, and others, outside the Convention Center, many of which are scattered throughout the large area from the Children's Museum to the west. Petco Park to the east. and along the streets that radiate out towards the Gaslamp Quarter and downtown.

Those events are usually free and well worth the time that you will spend waiting in the lines to visit them. This year, as I often do, I easily spent more than half of my time doing just that. Those FREE experiences included taking the reins of a Roman chariot in a race within a Coliseum (promoting Peacock's "Those About To Die"), playing carnival games and riding a thrilling ride (at ABC's "Abbot Elementary" themed AVA FEST and at "Adult Swim"), getting an apron and lunch box (for "The Bear") and an umbrella from FX, taking part in a scavenger hunt and getting a STAR TREK T-shirt at "The Lodge" (Paramount+), collecting free pins and a huge, Simpsons-themed donut at Hulu's Animavhem, getting grab bags filled with merch plus ice cream at the BoxLunch giveaway truck, dinner at Mickey's Pizza (Super 7 and TMNT), and much, much more.

For me the most valuable thing that I took away from Comic-Con this year was the knowledge that I got from networking. I learned to do that from an annually recurring Comic-Con panel called "Success in Creativity: Making the

Best of Your Resources

While the free merch and fun activations are great, I met two complete strangers at Comic-Con that may well put my 20+ year career writing these columns (almost 850 to date) on a sharp upward trajectory

I have not had the time or the knowledge to build much of a social media presence. One evening I asked someone to take my picture. We got to talking and he ended up telling me how Instagram Reels have been hugely beneficial for him, and he told me how I could do that too

Then, another day, a lady commented on my professional Canon camera and we struck up a conversation. It turns out that she has a crew of very talented people that together do what I do by myself. She is so grateful to the people who helped her as she began her now-successful career that she decided to pay it forward and help others — including me. We are already working towards that. Stay tuned!

"I think Gilligan needs professional training," I said, huddled in the corner of our couch while our 16-month-old Labrador Retriever ran sprints from the couch to an armchair in the dining room and back, gnawing a shredded shopping bag in his mouth, leaving crumpled carpets and plastic bits in his wake.

As I'd done with our last two family dogs, I'd intended to train Gilligan myself. Our previous pets, Dinghy and Moby, faired well under my dedicated tutelage. On puppy walks, I simply stopped in grassy areas to practice "sit," "stay," "down," and other basic I'd seen a few episodes of "The Dog Whisperer," after all. Why would I pay someone else to train our dogs when I was a veritable expert myself?

While it was true that Dinghy never learned to "heel" - in fact he nearly tore my arm out of its socket while bolting after rabbits, squirrels and sand crabs — his keen hunting instincts were admirable. My proudest moment was the day I taught Dinghy to open our door using a tennis ball on a rope. This came in handy, until I left Dinghy alone to run errands, and came home to find a WWI-style trench dug across our backvard and the dog inside taking a nap on the white cotton quilted guest bed.

While I'd gladly take credit for Moby's obedience, the real truth is

The Meat & Potatoes To train or be trained? The dog owner's question that our second dog was an unusually submissive, easy-going lab. During puppy training, he'd look up at me, perpetually confused by commands to "sit," "stay," or "lay down." But determined to please, he usually did something good anyway.

During his one-year check up, I took the veterinarian aside to voice my concerns over Moby's abnormal compliance. "Hey Doc," I whispered, "can dogs be, uh, mentally challenged, or uh, you know, born with a low IQ?"

The veterinarian laughed and replied, "You don't want a dog that's smarter than you." I wasn't sure if he was insulting me or giving me advice, but I accepted his words at face value and enjoyed Moby for what he was - a very good boy.

Then, Gilligan came along.

Our training sessions began as soon as we brought him home from the Mennonite farm in Pennsylvania where he was born. "Tsssht!" I sputtered, mimicking the Dog Whisperer's characteristic admonishment when Gilly chewed chair legs, stole socks, jumped on furniture, piddled on the floor, dug in my houseplants, or sunk his fish-hook teeth into my hand.

Unlike Moby, Gilly thought the noises coming out of my mouth weren't commands to which he must submit, but rather, challenges that upped the ante. In Gilly's brain, every day was a new game that he was determined to win.

At home, Gilligan constantly played. Despite supplying him with baskets filled with dog-friendly amusements like collagen chews, rip-resistant cloth toys, and brain-teasing devices with tiny compartments to hide treats. Gilly maimed, swallowed, punctured, gutted or destroyed TV clickers, reading glasses, shoes, treasured stuffed animals, board games, notebooks, and laundry detergent bottles.

To Gilly, our fenced yard was the great Serengeti, where he hunted for prey. Unable to catch lightening-fast squirrels, rabbits and birds, he stalked something easier to kill - delivered packages. Amazon and USPS parcels always arrived the same way, tossed over the gate onto our porch, where Gilly believed they'd landed specifically for him. Immediately sinking his teeth into their cardboard or bubblewrapped flesh, he'd run around the yard celebrating his victory before tearing his victims into tiny, wind-blown bits

The walks were the final straw. No command, "tshhht!", treat, pinch collar, or harness would stop Gilly from pulling hard on his leash, dragging me, helpless, from corner to corner

Unable to tame our naughty new Lab, we recently sought professional help. Although we didn't buy him a lava lamp or a Twin XL bedspread, the training academy's exorbitant fees and boarding requirement made it seem like Gilly was off to college.

After two weeks of 24/7 training, Gilly graduated and came home. But then, he stared up at me, waiting for the calm, assertive leader he'd been taught to follow.

"I think I need professional training," I proclaimed, realizing that there are no naughty dogs, only naughty owners.

Urine test detects high-risk prostate cancers

NIH, July 2025

Prostate cancer is a leading cause of cancer death among men. Scientists have developed a urine test that could help some men avoid unnecessary biopsies.

Screening for prostate cancer usually involves a blood test. The test measures levels of a substance called prostate specific antigen (PSA). High PSA levels may require more tests, such as a biopsy. A biopsy involves removing small samples from the prostate gland. Doctors then look for cancer cells.

Biopsies are generally safe. But they are sometimes painful. And they can lead to side effects like a fever or urinary tract infection.

Scientists have been looking for ways to avoid unnecessary biopsies. A decade ago, a research team created a urine test to detect prostate cancer. It could identify prostate cancer in its early stages. But the test could not tell the difference between serious cancers and slow-growing cancers. Slow-growing cancers may never need treatment.

In their latest study, the scientists created an improved urine test. They analyzed genes from hundreds of patients with prostate cancer. They found 18 genes in urine that could be used in combination to spot the presence of serious cancers.

They next used the new test to assess the urine of over 700 men with high PSA levels. The test could distinguish aggressive cancers from low-risk cancers. And it could rule out the presence of aggressive cancer with 97% accuracy.

"In nearly 800 patients with an elevated PSA level, the new test was capable of ruling out the presence of clinically significant prostate cancer with remarkable accuracy," says study co-lead Dr. Jeffrey Tosoian of Vanderbilt University. "This allows patients to avoid more burdensome and invasive tests"

Veterans News

Prepare for VA's secure sign-in changes

EDITOR'S NOTE: Refer to https://news.va.gov/133159/prepare-for-vas-secure-sign-in-changes for more details about this story.

VA is committed to making it as easy as possible for veterans to manage their benefits and health care online while protecting their identities and data.

As part of this commitment, and in an effort to streamline veterans' sign-in options, VA will transition to two modern, secure, sign-in options in 2025: a Login.gov or ID.me account.

After this transition, veterans, beneficiaries and caregivers looking to access VA's online services (VA.gov, the VA: Health and Benefits mobile app, and other VA online services) will need to sign in with either a Login.gov or ID.me account.

Veterans and other beneficiaries will no longer be able to use usernames and passwords for My Healthe Vet after Jan. 31, 2025, or DS Logon after Sept.

VA will provide information and support throughout this transition. Veterans can begin this transition now by visiting www. va.gov/sign-in-changes to learn how to create a verified Login. gov or ID.me account.

The process takes about 10 minutes. Importantly, veterans who do not transition before these deadlines will be able to resume accessing their data, benefits and services online as soon as they create a Login.gov or ID.me account.

This transition only impacts account-based online services. Many VA webpages are accessible without signing in—such as finding information about VA locations, downloading VA forms, learning more about the PACT Act, how to file claims, and more

Why is VA transitioning to Login.gov or ID.me accounts? This transition is our response to Veterans' feedback to offer fewer sign-in account options and help reduce confusion and sign-in complexity.

This change helps us continue to protect the security of veterans' identities and data by making sure that all veterans are using modern, secure accounts and have the added protection of multifactor authentication.

Identity theft and related medical identity theft are serious issues that can cause severe financial hardship and disruption in medical care for Veterans and their families.

In 2023, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) received more than 1 million reports of identity theft. That same year, veterans and military retirees also reported to the FTC $350 million in losses to fraud.

Federal policy requires VA to help all veterans begin using a sign-in account that meets modern security standards, and that Veterans' sign-in experience is as simple as possible. Login. gov and ID.me helps us meet both these requirements.

Actions to take and who's affected If you use an account to access any VA online services—including through VA's mobile app—and are not yet using Login.gov or ID.me, this change will impact you. Don't worry—there's still time to transition.

If you: Already use a Login. gov or ID.me account to access VA's online services or mobile app, you are all set and don't need to do anything additional.

•Currently use a DS Logon or My HealtheVet username and password to access VA's online services or mobile app, we encourage you to create a Login.gov or ID.me account sooner rather than later so you have time to get used to it before this change.

Your Local USO Wants You!

Volunteers are our greatest asset and the backbone of the USO. Whether helping a Sailor or Marine with a connecting flight, distributing a Care Package, serving snacks with a smile, providing local information, or "welcoming home" ships and troops from deployment, volunteers are vital to the success of the USO's mission.

While the duties of a volunteer may vary, the goal is always the same – to improve the quality of life of service members, boost their morale, and serve as the link between service members and the American people.

Ready to apply to be a USO San Diego volunteer?
